“ I can recall your first cry when I welcomed you into this world. The joy, and pride I felt and instant bond we shared are now precious memories.

Greed, jealousy, envy, and stupidity by those who pretended to have your best interest at heart, gradually and systematically destroyed our relationship and kept us painfully apart.

It broke my heart to lose you, but you didn't go alone, part of me is with you wherever you may roam.

With love always,

Dad

All I ever asked of you as a married man and father of two young children, is to assist in taking care of your children. I was doing my part as a wife and a working mother. Helping to take care of your children was too much for you. You choose to walk away because it was easier for you to do so. You had a number of chances over the years to reconnect with your son's, but that's not what you wanted. My mother called you a number of times within the first year and put your sons on the phone to talk. You choose to not reach out to them. Even a phone call on your dime was too much effort. Then the children went to your sister's house when they were in high school. You had access to their cell phone numbers, since four different close family members got their numbers. You chose not to reach out. My dear Bassel, died of a broken heart. Bassel was such a loving sensitive child that grew up in the same way having a very loving heart, but was deeply hurt by your lack of action over the years. This hurt cut him to the core, when he was getting married and reaching out to you. You slapped him down emotionally and told him never to contact you again. Whether these instructions came from your new wife or from you directly, I am not sure but that is what Bassel told me. I was so disappointed in your response that I had to ask him if he found the right person. He had several reasons why he was proof positive, you were the correct person. That broke his heart. Fast forward to 2 years, before his death your daughter pretends to be some random person meeting him in Miami with a friend that Bassel was communicating with on Instagram. Then he starts communicating with her. All the while, he is not aware of who she really is. To him, it felt like a violation of his privacy and spying. No matter how I tried to console the situation, he was just deeply hurt emotionally.

What jealousy? What greed? No idea what you are talking about. Greedy to have a light bill paid and school books bought for kids. Jealous of what? I always worked hard in my career to take care of my children needs.
