“ Words can't really express how we all feel, but we can talk about some of the things we are going to miss and in sharing; remember as many of the great things about our friend as we can.

I have lost a friend, a colleague, a drinking buddy and a man who liked to talk about the future as much as I did.

Whether it be global politics, technological development, or our own personal life plans, we covered a wide range of subjects.

I was lucky enough to be walking out to lunch at the same time as Joe a few days before he was due to go on holiday, neither of us had plans, so we went to get food together.

He was excited about his holiday and full of plans regarding his new house and getting a new car for Hannah and himself to share. We lamented the Americans obsession with automatics, even as we talked about a mortgage being a great saving tool given his ultimate goal of moving to the states with Hannah.

Joe was a man full of life; in a loving relationship, with goals and plans for the future. The one thing that I can assure you all of is that Joe was happy. It's perhaps the only piece of solace I can offer in an otherwise desolate situation.

I'm going to miss you buddy and if there is another world after this, I'll meet you for lunch.
