“ I know you may not know me, but I am Eric Bejleri and Shazia was one of my closest friends throughout the entirety of my college experience. It was by meeting her and through her support that I was able to overcome many of the challenges that I faced in life. It was because of her that I was able to be strong and change for the better. I was always able to confide in her about anything, and I knew she would never be judgmental, and accept me no matter what. She was always there for me, and I cannot express just how much I am grateful to have met her. I know I am learning of her passing quite late and though I am unaware of how she went, I will be mourning her for the rest of my life. Knowing Shazia, she'd want everyone to believe in themselves and stay positive and supportive of themselves, and I know that this lesson will never leave me for as long as I live. The world lost a major source of light with her passing, but I know that wherever she is know, she's doing just fine. I love you deeply Shazia, and I hope that all your loved ones find peace one day.

“ Never thought I would have to write this. But, as you wrote in the prayer, may she have a peaceful journey ahead. We all are sent to this world by him and how much time we will spend here is determined by him too. So may be our little one had just this much time with us. She made your lives happy, filled it with joy and then bid adieu. It's sad, unkind and unforgiving, we do not understand God's ways and want to give up on anything we believe. But faith is the only instrument that keeps us together and pulls us through our own journey. Finally life is one's own journey Sab. This is something you must have realised in these last 20 days. The parents who give us birth, release us. The rest of the journey is ours. Though we hang on to our parents but finally each is on his own. You could not be with your parents, you were hard on yourself, wondering what can you do when they most need you. But here little Shazia strong and healthy, had no reason to leave yet she did, with you by her side. God has his strange ways of making us realise and at the same time taking care of us. Shazia, I cannot say is in a better place, she was when she was with you. But her life had just this much span with you. Now she is on her new journey and so are you. Life without her is unimaginable but you have to live it regardless. Wounds are ways of being more sensitive, more understanding and more tolerant. Be strong, you already are, but this is the most difficult test, stay calm, be accepting and pray that she is released. Send your your strength and love and prayers on her new journey 🙏

“ Shazia my princess, we always sheltered and protected you with all our wit, keeping you close and safe . You made us so proud, brought immense joy in our lives, gave us a reason to smile every single day. You were the brightness to the dullness that life sometimes brought. Now you've taken on a journey all by yourself, alone and far far away. But you'll always have a piece of mommy and daddy's heart. Your heart stopped beating and we share with you ours, your hands felt cold but we give you our warmth so you can take on this journey to eternity. May you stay blessed with the Lord in heaven as I know he will take very good care of you. You're his precious child and he couldn't wait but call you to be with him where you'll spread joy and kindness like you did here. You'll always be our little girl and our most favorite child! We love you so much more than words will ever say.
