“ I’ve known Zoraya since 1991. She was my neighbor, she became my best friend, my mother, my son’s grandmother. She was the one that stayed until 2 o’clock in the morning, making croquetas for his birthday. I always called her and asked her... “Do you have time for a coffee?” Once I walked in we started talking about our crafts. “Oh God! Look what I did today. Look what I did this week.” We loved crafts. When I couldn’t go, I just called her and asked her, “What part of your body hurts today?” We always had something that hurt, whether it was our knees or our hands, and we would just make jokes about it. If I’ll miss something the most, I’m going to miss her laugh. I loved how hard she laughed out loud at my jokes. But also the thing I’m gonna miss the most is her coffee. Oh boy, if somebody can make a Cuban coffee it was Zory. I called her Wednesday to see how she was doing. She told me she will pass by if she had time on Thursday, but I guess she didn’t feel good. Her last words were. I love you.
I will miss her so much RIP my dear Zory.
